The ancient geographical division order of this region can be known on the basis of the inscriptions found in the taluk. This was the most prominent part. It means the two thousandth administrative part of the two rivers. That is, this is the area between present day Krishna and Tunge. While this is what Muslim historians call the 'Doab', the Mukkundi and Salagundi inscriptions mention that this taluk was included in the area of the 'Kelawadi Bihundi' division.

In this area, for agriculture we will have sufficient water source and it will help the farmers to grow paddy and jawar, women farmers are found this area and they are chosen this field for their income generation

Women farmers play an important role in agriculture and allied activities, but often remain invisible. They lack access to information, resources, land, extension services, credit, technology and local institutions compared to men, further restricting their agency and impacting the overall economy with productivity losses and reduced workforce participation. Due to these factors, their participation in decision making and market related activities are low. With rising incomes, agriculture and allied sectors are witnessing a rise in commercialization causing new enterprises to emerge - this further invisibles the role of women and also reduces economic navigational opportunities. There is a need to promote women only FPOs to ensure better participation of women enhance access to resources and services and sustain better income. This interlaid will ensure the promoting entities and Implementing Agencies provided in the Ministry's Operational Guidelines and other supporting mechanisms like Cluster Business Organizations locate value chains with higher women participation, adapt for women to join and focus on leadership development.

Evolving Small and Marginal Farmer Landscape: Emergence of FPOs According to the Economic Survey of India 2018, small and marginal farmers account for more than 85% of all farmers in the country. They face several challenges like access to quality inputs, information, credit, technology and markets. They are also the most Farmer Producer Organisations (FPOs) have emerged as the most preferred institutional mechanism to mobilize

All Directors are women members and FPO working towards women empowerment, the company has done several work and plan of Value addition.

Overall, women's empowerment and gender equality, as measured by the WEAI indicators, is significantly associated with various development outcomes, but which aspects of empowerment are most important for improved outcomes vary across contexts. While some outcomes, such as children's diets and nutrition, are consistently positively associated with women's empowerment, important tradeoffs emerge. Increased engagement in agriculture may improve some aspects of empowerment, but also increase women's workloads on top of existing care and domestic work responsibilities.
